Streams make a difference for children's music charity

Watford band Uncharted Territory Music are excited to share details of their third charity single, 'Day by Day'. The song was recorded locally at Sanctuary Studios and released on Valentine's Day, and will be sharing the love with London-based charity Music4Children.

As with the band's previous releases, its founder Gee Singh will give the song's chosen charity any of his own personal income that is generated from the single's first year of streams and sales. Music4Children has decided to split these funds between its work with learning disabled and neurodiverse young people, and the children's shelter it supports in Nepal.

Music4Children has been working with learning disabled and neurodiverse young people since 2016. This is when it first partnered Quarterdeck Youth Centre in Margate (renamed Northdown Road Family Hub in 2024), while its work with Somers Town Youth Centre in Camden started more recently (2022).

Support for the shelter in Nepal began from before the start of construction through to its opening in 2014, and has continued since then. The shelter currently cares for 23 disadvantaged girls, and is owned and managed locally by Help Nepal Network. It will also be the beneficiary of any charitable funds generated by Uncharted Territory Music's first single, 'Spiritual Quest', which was itself inspired by a visit to the Himalayas.

Gee Singh said "I am delighted to be aligning Uncharted Territory Music, once again, with the team at Music4Children. I hope the streams from our new song, 'Day by Day', will raise enough to make even a small difference for some of the projects that Music4Children are involved with. Please help by streaming and sharing the music, to spread the love"

Gavin Watts of Music4Children said "We are really grateful to Gee and his fellow band members for their support. Funding has been harder to find recently, so any efforts to boost this is extremely welcome. We hope everyone can check out the music and add it to their playlists."
