

The Great British Bake Off 2019:

The Definitive Instagram Review

In contrast to many reality TV shows, The Great British Bake Off results aren't influenced by a public vote. The show is judged by experts in the field, instead of being a popularity contest like other programmes. But what would the results show if Bake Off did rely on public opinion?

Compare My Move has crunched the numbers on the social data for series 10, analysing the bakers' Instagram activity to reveal the outcome if the public could vote, whether getting dumped has an effect on their follower count and how much the contestants could earn from a single Instagram post. The full dataset can be found here.

Headline figures at a glance:

- Henry Bird gained a follower increase of 6,040%, with an impressive 107,153 following count. He would win if the public could vote
- Despite not even making the semi-final, Henry Bird can currently earn £461.47 per post (£7.53 pre-show) and runner up Alice Fevronia can earn £333.54 per post (£6.09 pre-show)
- Winner David Atherton would have been dumped in week 7 based on followers, not even making it to the semi-final
- Henry Bird gained an unprecedented increase of 29,200 followers after he left, and Michael Chakraverty saw 18,200 new followers after his exit
- The most liked photos on Instagram all featured Henry Bird after he was eliminated from the competition, racking up a total of 100,700 likes
- Jamie Finn saw the highest growth in followers for 3 consecutive weeks, even after his exit in episode 2
- Finalist Stephanie Blackwell would have left the show in week 3 if there was a public vote, with just 2,432 followers, despite proceeding to win 'Star Baker' 4 times

The full dataset can be found here. Data was collected weekly, the day after the episode aired and taken from the contestants' Instagram account. The average Instagram post earning came from Inkifi and the average salary was taken from Reed.

How Would Bake Off Pan Out if The Public Voted?

Compare My Move tracked the bakers' Instagram activity for 11 weeks, including pre-show data, their job title and salary, as well as weekly follower counts. We discovered that the results would be drastically different if the outcome were to be influenced by a public vote.

By working out who had the lowest following count each week, Compare My Move can reveal how the Bake Off final could have looked like. As the table below shows, Henry Bird would have won the competition with an impressive 107,153 follower count, leading the way by 29,778 followers.

Another fan favourite, Jamie Finn, would have reached week 8 instead of exiting the show in week 2. Stephanie Blackwell, who won Star Baker an impressive 4 times and even made it to the final 3, would have actually been dumped in week 3.

Week	Judge's Vote	Public Vote
1	Dan Chambers	Phil Thorne
2	Jamie Finn	Rosie Brandreth-Poynter
3	Amelia Le Bruin	Stephanie Blackwell
4	Phil Thorne	Priya O'Shea
5	Helena Garcia & Michelle Evans-Fecchi	Amelia Le Bruin & Dan Chambers
6	Priya O'Shea	Michelle Evans-Fecchi
7	Michael Chakraverty	David Atherton
8	Henry Bird	Jamie Finn
9	Rosie Brandreth-Poynter	Helena Garcia
10 - Third Place	Stephanie Blackwell	Alice Fevronia
10 - Runner Up	Alice Fevronia	Michael Chakraverty
10 - Winner	David Atherton	Henry Bird

Does Being Dumped Matter?

The short answer, no. We found that more often than not when a contestant was dumped, they gained the highest growth in followers for that week. Michael Chakraverty was dumped in week 7 and soon gained 18,200 followers before the next episode even aired.

Jamie Finn's exit from the show shocked many fans, they all seemed to agree he was dumped too soon. We discovered that Jamie had the most increase in followers for 3 consecutive weeks, including the week he left the competition. This coincided with the bakers seeing the smallest growth in followers for episode 3.

Henry Bird attracted an unprecedented 29,200 followers after he left the tent, racking his total count up to 84,300 by week 9. However, David Atherton has just 59,577 followers as of the day after the final, despite being crowned the winner.

Week	Highest Follower Growth	Follower Increase	Dumped
1	Jamie Finn	10,876	No
2	Jamie Finn	8,200	Yes
3	Michael Chakraverty	3,665	No
4	Henry Bird	8,670	No
5	Helena Garcia	14,336	Yes
6	Michael Chakraverty	7,100	No
7	Michael Chakraverty	18,200	Yes
8	Henry Bird	29,200	Yes
9	Henry Bird	22,853	Yes

How Much Can Contestants Earn From Instagram Posts?

We've analysed how much the bakers can earn per Instagram post, but can this year's cast make a living from Instagram or should they stick to their day job? We discovered that the public's favourite baker, Henry Bird, is on track to make the most dough from his Instagram posts, with one post earning him roughly £431.43.

The oldest contestant, Phil Thorne, will make the least from Instagram, despite consistently posting more frequently out of the other bakers, with an expected earning of just £26.51 per post. Coincidentally, Phil entered Bake Off with one of the highest-earning jobs, whilst Henry was a student without a salary.

Winner David Atherton can currently earn £257.23 for a single Instagram post, whilst runner up Alice Fevronia and Michael Chakraverty, who left the competition in week 7, have potential to earn £333.54 and £331.64 per post, with 77,375 and 77,025 followers respectively.

Contestant	Job Title	Salary	Pre-Show Post Worth	Post-Show Post Worth
Alice Fevronia	Geography Teacher	£38,719	£6.09	£333.54
Amerlia Le Bruin	Fashion Designer	UN	£4.04	£34.43
Dan Chambers	Support Worker	£19,500	£3.51	£37.39
David Atherton	Health Advisor	£37,496	£3.77	£257.23
Helena Garcia	Online Projects Manager	£47,612	£10.85	£192.84
Henry Bird	Student	NA	£7.53	£461.47
Jamie Finn	Part-Time Waiter	£21,731	£9.38	£144.56
Michael Chakraverty	Fitness Instructor	£26,500	£4.74	£331.64
Michelle Evans-Fecchi	Print Shop Administrator	£20,680	£4.73	£112.67
Phil Thorne	HGV Driver	£39,245	£1.79	£26.75
Priya O'Shea	Marketing Consultant	£26,750	£3.26	£48.91
Rosie Brandreth-Poynter	Vet	£43,251	£2.16	£88.11
Stephanie Blackwell	Shop Assistant	£19,763	£2.52	£234.23

UN = We could not find accurate salary data for Amelia Le Bruin

NA = Henry Bird entered the competition without a job and salary
