Foreword

When members of the public think of what a fundraiser does day-to-day, undertaking research and developing relationships with grant-makers might not be high on the list of activities that spring to mind, but for thousands of charities across the UK such work is an essential part of their fundraising activity. From contributing to capital projects, funding research, supporting pilot schemes and underpinning innovation, to helping with charities' essential running costs, grant-makers are often the unsung heroes of our sector.

As Chair of Trustees for the Institute of Fundraising, I have the privilege of championing the excellent fundraising of our members and the wider sector. For charity fundraisers, their job means not only connecting grant-making bodies to the causes they want to invest in, but also developing thoughtful and long-lasting partnerships based on trust and confidence that lead to achieving shared goals and objectives. Excellent fundraisers cultivate bespoke applications and appeals that demonstrate compellingly how a particular project can help charities achieve their purpose; they make valuable connections and maximise support for good causes. When these relationships are rewarding for both the funder and the charity, they have the potential to be transformational.

The initial research undertaken by a fundraiser is often the first step. It can sometimes feel time-consuming in the short term, but in the long run it provides real benefit by focusing minds and identifying suitable partners to approach for joint work. No one wants to spend unnecessary time making or reviewing inappropriate applications and so being able to depend on a resource such as The Directory of Grant Making Trusts is hugely valuable. With those many thousands of grant-making bodies nationwide, it's easy to feel overwhelmed and having the key details of the geographical area, grants awarded and, most importantly, funding interests, priorities and criteria all in one place is incredibly useful to find the grant-maker that can be right for your charity and project.

If you are new to this area of fundraising, you might find that the world of grant-makers is a little mysterious and opaque – you might not quite know where to start and search engines are too blunt an instrument for the kind of information you need. That's why it's vital to have a tool like this directory that does the heavy lifting for you. I've always thought the world of funders is a bit like an iceberg – you can often only see 10% of what's there above the water – so you need resources like this to be able to take a deep dive and appreciate the full picture. Whatever the cause, there's a funder out there that will be making grants in that area – with The Directory of Grant Making Trusts, and your excellent fundraising skills, you will be best placed to find the right funding for you.

THE DIRECTORY OF GRANT MAKING TRUSTS 2020/21

The Directory of Grant Making Trusts offers the information you need to seek your charity's share of over £5 billion – the annual total awarded by the 2,000 funders featured in this edition. With data sourced directly from grant-making charities, each with the potential to give around £50,000 or more per year, the directory includes:

- Concise information and contact details for every record
- Total amounts of funding available from each grant-maker
- Examples of beneficiaries in each listing, for guidance on the organisations previously funded
- Extensive indexes divided by geographical area, field of interest and beneficiary group, organisation type, and kinds of grant available
- Each grant-maker's description of project types that can or cannot qualify for funding

Now in its 26th edition, this is the UK's best-selling guide to funding from grant-making charities. No charity, big or small, should be without it.

Save time on finding funding prospects

Discover funders you might not have known existed

'As a small charity we need to carefully target our limited fundraising resources, so the directory is an indispensable guide to identifying and prioritising the funds that most closely match our specialist services for refugees and asylum seekers.'

Karen Lawson, Funding and Projects Manager, Suffolk Refugee Support

'Never mind a place on the bookcase, this directory should be by your side at all times.'

Thomas Wilson, Trust Fundraiser, Northern Ireland Hospice
