

Most people don't want to hear about this, and even fewer people want to talk about this, but God laid it on my heart to tell my story. I used to tell it to the kinds of people who got paid to hear it - doctors, counselors, and even my minister. But the more I opened up to these folks, the more doors would eventually close in my face. I wasn't willing to accept being shut out, though, because I realized that I must not be the only person experiencing these disappointments and dead-ends.

Erectile dysfunction is a problem that affects men from every demographic. From teenagers to the elderly, erectile dysfunction does not discriminate based on age, race, or even general health. Yes, erectile dysfunction becomes more prevalent as we age, but it can affect plenty of younger men as well. At the same time, it shouldn't be viewed as a death sentence for older men, because some people find it pretty easy to treat after consulting their doctor. However, it's not always a cut-and-dry problem, and that is exactly what I'm here to talk about.
