

"The world likes to define you and interrupt you so it can tell you who you should be. Art is my way of telling the world who I am in my own words, uninterrupted. Being an artist can be perceived as a frivolous, silly endeavor. Pursuing art as a profession or as a hobby can be viewed as a fruitless impossibility. After fifteen years of creating artwork, the list of things this endeavor has taught me is sweetly significant. This book will share some of those simple lessons with you."

Kasha Ritter is an artist and writer living on Martha's Vineyard. Her artwork hangs in private collections throughout New Zealand, Italy, the United States, and Canada. Her background in marketing and technical illustration laid the foundation for a diverse portfolio with over six hundred images on file.
