Thursday 6 August, 2020

New technologies and ideas will bring changes to digital marketing, and with the recent COVID-19 pandemic, industries are impacted in varying degrees. How should companies respond to the challenges and opportunities the current reality presents? What kind of interaction will be most attractive to consumers and users? You may find the answers to these questions at GMIC's upcoming Global Marketing Summit on September 24-25.

The Global Marketing Summit has been hosted at each GMIC (Global Mobile Internet Conference) since 2009. It has become one of the most influential platforms for marketing experts around the world to discuss how to enhance connection with their respective target audiences and how to make their brand concept grow. As new technologies emerge, they also explore potential advertising formats that are more adaptable during volatile times.

Taking a global perspective, the Marketing Summit in September will connect the world via a live stream across six countries and invite top digital marketing professionals from Twitter, Pixar, Digital Holdings, Pinduoduo, Perfect World, GSK and many other successful brands. The summit will explore topics such as growing business in the digital arena, trends & strategies of expanding business in foreign markets, digital transformation of the entertainment industry, adopting AI and big data to improve marketing strategies, 5G applications, data privacy, brand safety, etc.

The COVID-19 crisis has considerably affected the digital marketing sphere. The attendees will also share fresh data and insights from handling the challenges or capturing the opportunities during this tremendous shift.
