5 Thesis Writing Websites That Facilitate the Data Collection and Analysis for PhD Research Project

Sunday 28 May, 2023

Writing a PhD thesis is difficult but conducting actual research and analysis of the collected data is far more difficult. Both these tasks require the students and researchers to invest enough time into them, and unfortunately, not everyone has enough time to accomplish such tasks.

Let's face it: will you be able to take time out for all this mess that PhD research gets you into after attending classes all day and working one or two jobs? The answer is no – even if a person tries to manage it all together, it will become extremely challenging for him to be productive at everything without mismanaging any of them. That is why thesis writing websites exist to bring some ease and comfort to the life of students.

Here we introduce the UK's five best thesis writing websites that not only help you write a PhD dissertation but also offer expert assistance with excellent data collection and analysis process. Let's discover how these thesis writing agencies facilitate both these processes for a PhD research project.

What Type of Data is Required for a PhD Research Project?

After successfully choosing a topic for your PhD research project, you must collect data to be included in the written project. There are two broad categories in which you can classify the data needed for the dissertation:

- Empirical Data
- Theoretical Data

Empirical Data

Empirical data for a PhD research project is the one which is collected by evaluating concrete evidence. It can be either quantitative or qualitative. It can also have a mixed nature.

Qualitative Data

Qualitative data cannot be numerically measured, unlike quantitative data. It is based on observations, surveys and interviews.

Quantitative Data

It is the data type that can be measured and verified with numbers. It is based on solid, concrete, measurable evidence.

Theoretical Data

Theoretical data for your PhD research project will be collected from diverse scholarly sources such as journal articles and books. You get the theoretical background information from such resources relating to your research.

How Can A Thesis Writing Website Help You in Collecting Theoretical Data for PhD Research Projects?

When you decide to get academic help from thesis writing websites online, you should know their data collection methods for your PhD research project to ensure you are getting quality academic help online. These websites use the following resources for data collection for a PhD research project:

- Monographs
- Online or physical conference proceedings
- Online data repositories such as ERIC, Scopus, or Google Scholar
- Academic Journals

Professional thesis writing websites also use the best academic search engines to find the most relevant scholarly content for your dissertation.

Searching for Existing Dissertations

If you want to collect data for your dissertation and find out the aspects focussed by the previous researchers, you should ask your assigned writer to go through the existing dissertations. Looking at all the dissertations that have been completed previously will help the writer find out the approaches used by other researchers in the PhD research project. Ask the writer to pay attention to the references used by the researchers and try to find out the existing relevant theories related to your topic.

Data-Sharing Platforms

Several data-sharing platforms can also help a writer gather relevant data for a presentation. A majority of students share their research papers on various online academic platforms, such as the following:

- Calameo
- Slideshare
- Medium

Even if you do not find useful data from these websites, you will find valuable sources which may inspire you to work on your PhD research project. Check the credibility of these sources before you start to work on your papers.

How do Thesis Writing Websites Collect Empirical Data?

When searching for empirical data for your dissertation, a professional thesis writing website first decides what sort of data it wants to obtain. Here are the ways to find both the qualitative and quantitative data:

Qualitative Data

Qualitative data is the type of data that is not measurable and can be written in words. Such data is context-dependent, rich, and elaborate, precise and based on observed facts and figures. Non-text based and non-numerical data are two types of such data.

The methodology used to obtain such type of data for a PhD research project includes the following means:

Surveys

Focus groups

Knowledge databases

Interviews

Observations

How do Thesis Writing Services Help the Students in Performing Data Analysis?

The data analysis section of a dissertation is the most important because it aims to show the research skills of a doctoral student. Most institutes dedicate 40% of the total marks to this section of a PhD research project. When you choose a professional thesis writing service, such as The Academic Papers UK, it will structure your data analysis section and facilitate the process for you accordingly.

General Structure of a Data Analysis Section:

Each university guides and instructs the students to follow a data analysis writing structure, but all educational institutions follow a universal template. Generally, a PhD research project's data analysis section follows the given structure:

- An output of the calculations performed during the process
- A comprehensive interpretation of the obtained results
- The detailed discussion of the results in the light of empirical evidence
