

A Staggering 70% of Parents Lose More Than 130 Nights of Sleep in their Baby's First Year

Thursday 25 February, 2021

Every new parent expects to lose some sleep, but according to a new survey a staggering 7 in 10 parents are losing an average of three hours' sleep every night in their baby's first year – the equivalent of losing a phenomenal 133 night's worth of sleep* before their baby turns 1!

With the majority of parents losing over one third of a year's sleep - the realities of parental sleep deprivation cannot be ignored.

The recent survey, which was commissioned by Snüz, the brand committed to creating ideas for happy sleep, questioned more than 1,300 parents, who shared their personal experiences. Nearly half of them (44%) felt massively unsupported when it came to their baby's sleep.

In a separate poll, Snüz chatted to its army of 82k+ parents across Instagram to find out how they truly feel about the first year of sleep! When questioned about their baby not sleeping, 88% admitted to this being a cause of stress, while 77% talked about the anxiety they feel even before bedtime starts as they anticipate a sleepless night. Alongside these emotions, 65% of those questioned said they often felt lonely when up late with their newborn.

With stress, anxiety, loneliness and exhaustion on the cards, it's clear to see how the first year of parenting can take its toll. Concerned by these results and with an ever-growing awareness of the importance of parental mental health, the team at Snüz felt it was important to open up the discussion and provide an outlet for parents to connect with.

Introducing Sleep Support Month by Snüz; a National Campaign to Support Sleep Deprived Parents. Throughout the whole of March, Snüz will be supporting and educating new parents in dealing with the challenges of sleep.

From 1st March, Snüz will be giving parents a virtual high five and lauding its online community with weekly shoutouts, giveaways, and a wealth of sleep content from experts including The Honest Midwife. Information will cover everything from safe sleep practices and understanding your little one's bedtime needs, to how to look out for yourself and your partner.

Sleep Support Month will be held with help from The Sleep Charity, an organisation passionate about raising awareness of the impact of sleep deprivation, as well as providing training and advice.

The Sleep Charity will be helping provide an expert voice and tips for parents, and in return, the brand will donate £5 for every SnüzCloud sold during March to support all the amazing work they do promoting understanding and awareness around the complexities of sleep.

Snüz will also be introducing its Snüz Sleep Saviours, real mums and dads jumping online to share their experiences of parenthood and baby sleep with its community each week.

Commenting on its launch of Sleep Support Month, Mark Nicholls, Marketing Director at Snüz said:

"Parents are not only losing sleep in the first year, but they are also often feeling stressed, anxious and lonely. We strongly feel it is our responsibility to help, and although we can't turn up at their houses to offer a naptime for the family, we can commit a full month to trying to help from afar. A virtual pat on the back for the community of parents online. The month is bursting with advice, support, positivity and a large helping of 'You've Got This' to keep parents going and aid the ZZZ's!"
