Helps Dealers of Art and Antiques to Effortlessly Sell Stock Online

November 2021, LONDON—Leading antiques and collectibles marketplace, Antiques.co.uk, and Ronati have announced a joint technology partnership. It enables Antiques.co.uk dealers to easily post, edit and sell their stock on Antiques.co.uk as well as their own websites and other marketplaces, eradicating hours of endless frustration spent uploading and tracking item details and images on multiple sites.

Founded in 1996, Antiques.co.uk features 50,000 items listed daily by 1,300 sellers, many of whom are consummate experts in their field.

The Ronati eCommerce Manager (eCM) is the only multi-marketplace stock management system built specifically for sellers of unique and ever-changing stock. Dealers can currently manage their inventory listings across 15 online marketplaces, with new marketplaces being added monthly.

The eCommerce Manager frees up sellers for what's truly important: researching, finding, and selling more beautiful pieces.

"Ronati is making life simpler for all of us to sell antiques and art on multiple platforms on the internet, giving us all more time to do what we want: finding our next treasure," notes Iain Brunt, Director and Owner Antiques.co.uk.

"Congratulations for them all in delivering this idea and we are delighted to be partnered with them."

Ronati Founder and CEO, Stacey Tiveron, adds:

"Iain Brunt has been the leading expert in bringing dealers online and helping them to succeed for twenty-five years. Simply put, he comes from where they come from—his understanding, expertise and passion for the online art and antiques trade is possibly unrivalled. I could not be happier to partner Ronati up with him and Antiques.co.uk to help their dealers more effortlessly sell stock online."

ANTIQUES.CO.UK When you see the marketplace domain Antiques.co.uk, you know this is an enterprise that has its roots in the birth of the international art and antiques market's web life. The man behind it then is the man behind it now, establishing and nurturing an unbroken timeline of curated art, antiques, and collectibles.

Iain Brunt was first drawn to antiques and art through his love and curiosity about the stories behind each piece and their unique place in history. He went on to work for one of the greatest art dealers globally of the 20th Century, Daniel Wildenstein, for twelve years.
