For any business, irrespective of industry, staying on top of the competition should be a primary concern. New businesses are being established everyday which is causing consumers to grow increasingly picky and indecisive when it comes to choosing which company they should part money with. Where once customers were preoccupied with finding the cheapest deal today's consumers look for far more from a company and there is a huge range of factors which can influence customer choice that all revolve around a business' ability to be different and offer them something meaningful that sets them apart from the rest. For customers, a business which is too similar to their competitors is not attractive, and can sometimes even seem suspicious. It is therefore vital that businesses are doing everything in their power to create a point of difference. Leading sales and marketing firm Privilege Promotions are experts in presenting their clients' brands to consumers in a unique and personal way, helping them to stand out from the crowd and form lasting connections with their target audience. The firm do this by working closely with each client in order to gain a real understanding of their core values and brand identity. The firm also rely on their extensive market knowledge to keep their clients on top and are urging businesses to follow suit and assess the market and their competitors regularly in order to understand what consumers want and what competitors aren't offering.

Through their work Privilege Promotions have devised three golden rules which, if implemented correctly, can help businesses stay on top within their industry. Here, the firm have shared these rules and outlines how and why each one must be followed.

Utilise the CRM System

CRM systems provide businesses with an easy way to not only manage customer data and understand their customers better, but to share data within the company, so that a customer's experience is personalised and streamlined no matter what department that are dealing with. However CRM is too often only utilised as a single tool and is often focused on seller information when in fact, businesses can gain a lot more insight into their target audience by integrating CRM with two other important tools, marketing automation and sales acceleration.

Integrate Marketing Automation

On its own marketing automation can provide a business with information regarding which marketing channels resonate the most with an audience by tracking which content has received the most buyer interest. From this businesses are able to build marketing strategies that are focused on their consumers' interests and which helps them to stand out.

Implement Sales Acceleration

When paired with a high performing CRM system and marketing automation, sales acceleration can have some dramatic results thanks to its ability to produce vital engagement data. Sales acceleration can not only help a business to be more accurate in assessing the popularity of products and content, it can take on a range of automated tasks such as filtering out dead end leads, saving a business time and money. Sales Acceleration technologies can also be personalised to the needs of each business, meaning that employees can benefit from features designed to boost engagement and provide specific customer support, which is incredibly important for consumers who want to feel connected to a brand.
