Booking for 2020 Holiday Season Shows No Signs of Being Affected By Brexit

Friday 20 December, 2019

Amidst all the general gloominess and pessimism surrounding Brexit, one Cornish Holiday Chalet company is reporting that their bookings for 2020 are looking healthier than ever before.

> 'We're wondering if people have already decided to stay at home and holiday within the UK this year, as we've seen an increase in bookings on this time last year.' says owner Michelle Bates.

Twice As Nice Beach Chalets are situated at the famous town of Hayle in Cornwall, where the 'three miles of golden sands' beaches have long been sought after by holidaymakers. Staying at Twice As Nice Chalets means that you're just a climb over some sand dunes away from being able to see the beautiful blue Cornish sea and coastline in all its glory.

Except for high summer, dogs are welcome at Twice As Nice Chalets too, so you can take your 4-legged best friends on the holiday of a lifetime with you and let them run along those gorgeous beaches to their hearts content.

So if you're booking your holiday over the Christmas period, or have yet to sort out your travel plans for next year, take a look at what other UK travellers are doing about their holidays in preparation for the high possibility of leaving the EU without a deal.

It seems like UK citizens are already planning for the event of a no deal Brexit, particularly in terms of their holiday plans for 2020. There's a higher than average number of British travellers ditching the travel company and, with only a few months left until the summer holiday season is already here, they're foregoing any plans to travel to the EU or visit an EU Country - at least until the transition period of Brexit sorts itself out.

If a Cornish seaside holiday chalet sounds like your ideal holiday, pop along to the website and check out Chalets in more detail, and the remaining 2020 availability, to plan your UK based seaside getaway for next year.
