

Bristol City's Aimee Palmer announced as ambassador for Jessie May

Tuesday 14 September, 2021

Jessie May is delighted to announce that Bristol City midfielder Aimee Palmer is to become an ambassador for the charity. Jessie May is a hospice at home care charity that provides specialist palliative and respite care to terminally ill children, and their families, across the South West.

The English footballer was keen to find a local charity to lend her support to. After seeing the work Jessie May do with families across the region, Aimee felt eager to lend her support,

"Being a professional sports person means that I have a platform for helping others. The opportunity to work with Jessie May and support their incredible work is an honour and a privilege. I look forward to getting to know the team and helping them to raise the profile of their charity"

Clare Pearce, Director of Funding Development at Jessie May comments,

"We are delighted to that Aimee is keen to become an ambassador for Jessie May. Having an ambassador with such a large fan base is an incredible opportunity for us to raise awareness and vital funds. We look forward to forming a great partnership"
