"About ARTA, this is the first year. And I think they deserve a lot of credit. Basically, I've been to many awards and won many accolades during the past years and years. ARTA founder, Mohammed Munim, said at the event, "I began this journey to combine my passion for cuisine, culture, and community. I saw the incredible talent spread across the UK within the Asian restaurant and takeaway industry."

"It's important to remember what has been done, but also to respect the next generation. From the very beginning I wanted this to be a moment that was about promoting the immense importance and popularity of the South Asian catering industry. Moreover, I wanted it to be a way to connect to the whole community."

Speaking at Asian Restaurant and Takeaway Awards, Leader of the Liberal Democrats, Sir Vince Cable said, "The purpose of this evening is to celebrate the achievements of a very important industry. This is a four-billion pound industry, which employs over a hundred thousand people, and makes a massive contribution to the British economy and to British society. But, it's also about saving the industry, not just celebrating it. I know that in recent years we've been losing on average two restaurants a week –the combination of pressures on the high street, on the industry are very great, and you're going to need maximum political support in order to pull through a crisis in the industry."
