Sundays in London will never be the same; The Berlin brünch pop-up is showing us how to do brünch lazily the Berlin way - lots of Bread Brunch Booze and Berlin vibes is the motto. brünch is creating a huge buzz as one of the quirkiest, vibrant and most diverse pop-ups in London's food scene right now, with more exciting plans ahead. Berlin has an amazing ability to make something out of little. With oodles of character, charm and wit, brünch re-creates this Berlin mentality and vibe, bringing people together to have a fun time over a long, lazy Berlin-style brünch.

Creative founder of brünch and Berlin-born Noemi Dulischewski has devised this clever new roaming pop-up concept, which hijacks the most unusual locations around London for bespoke one-off events, offering a unique experience for guests every single time. She scouts the best ingredients directly from local suppliers and producers where possible and uses her own recipes, which she sometimes shares on her blog on the brünch website.

"Brünch is about bringing people together to 'break bread', discover new places, share experiences and simply have a good time while enjoying a more-ish long, lazy breakfast… Berlin style." says Noemi Dulischewski, Brünch founder.

brünch is currently London based, with plans to expand the concept to Berlin and other European cities, while still maintaining its personal approach and passion that Noemi loves being able to offer at each pop-up brünch.

The next event location for brünch is on Sunday 26 July from 11.30am at the very cool Lassco Ropewalk in Bermondsey (41 Maltby Street, SE1 3PA). In Victorian railway arches and a treasure-packed warehouse, guests can enjoy some Berlin vibes, food and drinks amongst vintage designs & fabulous architectural salvage.
