Campaign for Better Transport has responded to the publication by the Department for Transport of Annual Bus Statistics for England 2012 / 2013.

Martin Abrams, Public Transport Campaigner, Campaign for Better Transport, said:

"Today's figures show the dire consequences of government cuts to support for buses. Year on year, we are seeing higher fares and fewer services. This is a false economy, preventing people from taking up job opportunities and hitting the poorest in society with massive hikes in travel costs."

Campaign for Better Transport has called for action to support bus services. Martin Abrams said:

"Buses are the lifeblood of the UK economy yet the economic, social and environmental importance of buses is not being recognised by those in power. It is time for a new approach to be taken by Government and for them to harness and realise the massive potential of buses."
