Car retailers could drive more customers to their showrooms if car finance options were better presented on their websites. That's the message from Auto Trader, the UK's largest digital automotive marketplace for buying and selling new and used vehicles. Its experts looked at online buying behaviour, the proportion of cars bought on finance and the number of dealers currently displaying finance offers online.

Paul Harrison, Auto Trader head of motor finance, explained: "The upsurge in PCP agreements in both the new and used car finance markets is making the list price of cars increasingly irrelevant. With 77% of consumer new cars [1] and around 25% of consumer used cars [2] currently sold on dealer finance, monthly payments have become the benchmark information for consumers on affordability."

"Yet we also know from Auto Trader research that only 15% of dealer websites currently present finance options, albeit 45% say they intend to do so. Given how consumer behaviour is changing – and the tendency of buyers to make all their big decisions while researching online – open and transparent information on car finance will offer dealers a real competitive advantage and ensure consumers properly consider dealer finance versus alternative sources."

Auto Trader buyer behaviour research underlines this message. Latest data [3] shows that 86% of consumers carry out their research after 6pm when showroom doors are closed. More than half of buyers arrive on a forecourt without making any prior contact with a dealer, having researched all parts of the deal online with 92% of consumers having already decided their payment method before reaching the showroom.

"Of course, it's vitally important that dealers get finance offers right, so as not to fall foul of the FCA's financial promotions rules," cautioned Harrison. "But this is an area in which we can provide support and assistance, and since its increasingly important information it's worth dealers giving this sufficient attention."

The sample comprised 16 dealers, four franchise groups (representing more than 250 dealerships with an even split between new and used car purchases), ten independents and two car supermarkets, making this one of the most comprehensive studies of its type in the industry.
