Synopsis

Despite being told it's too close to home, sergeant Hank Voight's Intelligence Unit are keen to investigate the murder of one of their own, but Internal Affairs, still after Voight's badge, hope to use Jin's homicide to finally get it.

On the surface it is business as usual for the team in the season two opener, as they stage a sting operation which ends in a shoot-out and a string of dead bodies.

Kim Burgess's new partner Sean Roman identifies one of them from his previous job, but Burgess cannot help but notice that Roman does not seem to be taking her very seriously.

She wonders if it is the first time that he has worked with a woman...
