Cobalt Recruitment launches new career guide to support Asset Management professionals

Friday 3 May, 2013

Leading real estate recruitment provider, Cobalt Recruitment, has produced a new career guide to support professionals working in Asset Management.

Designed to help jobseekers understand how the market is changing, and to gauge what skills they need in order to progress in their career, the guide will help both jobseekers looking to start out in Asset management, as well as those already working in the profession.

The role of Asset Management has evolved greatly over the past five years and even those already in Asset Management roles will benefit from this guide. Employers are looking for professionals with much higher analytical skills than before. Nick Howard, Head of Real Estate – General Practice for Cobalt Recruitment, comments:

“Asset Management roles are evolving. We deal with organisations across the world that are looking more intently for professionals who have a combination of core asset management and analytical skills and are competent users of Microsoft Excel. This didn’t used to be as common for property-based Asset Management.”

Cobalt Recruitment has been working with clients across the globe for over a decade, building strong relationships within the industry. Feedback from these clients has played a key part in developing this guide, highlighting the need for ever more specific skills in this area. Drawing together all of their experience and industry feedback, Cobalt has been able to define the challenges facing Real Estate professionals who want to advance their career within Asset Management, presenting it clearly in this guide.

Cobalt Recruitment's Asset Management Career Guide takes the form of five key areas, which you can read here: http://www.cobaltrecruitment.com/assetmanagement
