DocHQ announces a groundbreaking approach to workplace healthcare by introducing accessible at-home, fingerprick blood-screening health tests for employees, redefining healthcare within working environments.

DocHQ’s range of health checks covers general health – including vitamin levels, female hormone balance including menopause status, and cholesterol – as well as testing for diseases such as diabetes and cancers.

“We are committed to tailoring healthcare solutions to meet each employee's unique needs,” says Madhur Srivastava, CEO of DocHQ. “We streamline the health-testing process, ensuring accessibility and simplicity for every individual.”

DocHQ processes its blood tests in accredited UK laboratories compliant with ISO and UKAS standards. Each online results report is confidential, GP-verified and comes complete with doctor recommendations and guidance for peace of mind for each user.

DocHQ’s health checks deliver a range of benefits:

- Identifying health issues such as high cholesterol early, leading to improved prognosis for various conditions and prevention if picked up early.
- Monitoring metrics including (but not limited to) cholesterol, blood glucose (HbA1c), thyroid hormones and essential vitamins (vitamin B12, vitamin D and folic acid) can be done straightforwardly and conveniently.
- Users are provided with swift and easy access to vital health information, eliminating waiting time for appointments.
- Health concerns and results are managed in a private, comfortable setting.
- It provides a budget-friendly alternative to private healthcare without compromising accuracy or reliability.
- Annual health testing is also available to corporate businesses, and tests can be tailored to specific workforces according to their employee demographic.

“Seizing control of your health is now more convenient and cost-effective,” adds Srivastava. “Our range of health checks enables hassle-free monitoring, fostering a proactive wellbeing approach.”
