Elijah 'Make The Ting 360°' Immersive Experience Now Available Online

Wednesday 24 January, 2024

Part grime set, part lecture, part immersive installation, Elijah's Yellow Squares come to life in an exclusive, hybrid, digital experience of Make The Ting 360°.

In a unique leap from live to digital, with support from The Space, world-renowned digital arts charity Lighthouse and independent venue The Old Market commissioned an exclusive full-length recording of Elijah's Make The Ting 360° live from the event at the end of last year. It's now available to watch online, along with an animated highlights edition, and an exclusive interactive 360° video, elevating access and interactivity for audiences. Shaping a performance that extends well beyond the stage, Elijah, Lighthouse and The Old Market have aligned emerging technologies with established means of connecting and collaborating with audiences; a mean feat in the context of our current cultural landscape.

December 2023 saw a brand new, one-of-a-kind immersive experience in Brighton. Elijah's Yellow Squares made their 360° debut at The Old Market, funded by The Space, a national organisation that supports the cultural sector to be digitally innovative. Welcomed by a lively audience in the round, Make The Ting 360° is followed by this series of exclusive videos unique to the scene in its innovative, immersive, and original take on performance.

Described by an audience member as "exciting, accessible, inspiring, and brilliant", Elijah's debut Brighton performance was an industry first, bringing together an interactive lecture experience head to head with immersive, 360° technology – and a live grime MC set featuring Jammz.

The teams experimented with hybrid performance structures, reinventing what "immersive" can feel like for an audience – from wrapping the venue in 360° degrees of Elijah's Yellow Squares to incorporating new dimensions of experience by live streaming through Meta glasses.

Make The Ting 360° is a fresh take on traditional live events made possible by The Space, an organisation committed to facilitating accessible, digitally innovative work across the cultural sector, whilst connecting artists with diverse audiences. Each video edition experiments with the jump from in-person performance to cross-community digital experiences. The full-length video captures the collaboration between grassroots arts organisation Lighthouse and independent venue The Old Market, with the suspension of the 360° camera from the ceiling providing a perspective rarely seen, as the audience's live reactions are recorded in real-time.

This capture process was shared with the 2024 cohort of Lighthouse Young Creatives, providing the next generation of artists and thinkers with unique insight into immersive binaural sound, audio edits, and the intricacies of 360° viewing platforms. The animated video of Royal T's digital work, also accessible online, brings Elijah's Yellow Squares to life in a slick 10-minute highlight reel, adding further depth to the once static work.

As Jammz shared, "this was just one iteration" of the experience, with the event becoming an experiment in how we engage with the work from both 'inside' and beyond the yellow square; a process that will continue well beyond the immediate scope of the work.

"We've got to have different ways of presenting work now – we've done DJing, we've done pirate radio, we've done raves, we've done concerts; let's try other stuff man, let's make it interesting."

Elijah speaks of his experimentation with performative formats, "taking the squares out of Instagram and X into real life", finishing the event by writing one-of-one statements on the aptly blank yellow square of his vinyl albums.

One audience member said, "I'll be honest; I came here not knowing what the event was or what to expect, but after hearing everyone's questions and Elijah's responses to them... it's interesting, it's really interesting." Another audience member shared; "there are people from all different walks of life here – if I look behind me there's someone in their sixties, if I look beside me there are people in their twenties – seeing different people come together to learn and collaborate; it's really beautiful".

About Elijah

Elijah is a London-based writer, DJ, artist manager, and co-founder of the iconic record label, Butterz. He shares his thoughts on sustainable artistic creation, electronic music, grime, web3, community, social media and his various other interests in short notes, known as the Yellow Squares on Instagram and X (formerly Twitter).

Having worked with Lighthouse as Associate Artistic Director (2017-18), Elijah has a longstanding relationship with arts organisations in and beyond the music industry, with the yellow squares making their way onto billboards and into football stadiums, as well as lecture halls across the globe.

Since 2021, Elijah has been sharing his 15 years of experience in and beyond the music industry through his Yellow Squares, a digital phenomenon that has made its way offline into both a lecture series and an eight track album created with Grime MC, Jammz. "Make The Ting" was written and recorded in just seven days, with each track exploring the Yellow Squares as a gesture towards creative freedom and digital experimentation, with over one hundred listeners "remixing the ting" and producing their own original responses to the work.
