In a recent workshop series the firm covered the power of work ethic. Work ethic is defined as a belief in the moral benefit and importance of work and its inherent ability to strengthen character. Emora Ltd looked into how work ethic can affect every aspect of life and what people can achieve when they have a strong work ethic.

Emora Ltd also feels that it is vital for a person to take accountability for their actions so that they can learn from them and succeed. Emora Ltd understands that in businesses mistakes can happen, but these mistakes only lead to failure if the person refuses to take accountability for these mistakes and see them as a lesson for what not to do next time.

The Nottingham-based firm outlines that both a strong work ethic and taking accountability for one's actions is all part of developing an entrepreneurial mentality. Emora Ltd encourages their self-employed contractors to start developing an entrepreneurial mindset at an early stage in their business because they feel these qualities will set them apart from the competition.
