Engaged Tracking (ET) Recognizes How Local Donations Reduce Environmental Emissions, a Common Theme at SocialBox.Biz

Thursday 11 July, 2019

According to a recent LinkedIn post from Engaged Tracking (ET), donating locally can help to reduce environmental emissions. This supports data also released by SocialBox.Biz to assist companies to make their donations locally and find purpose for their old tech and other items that are still useful for the community interest.

At Engaged Tracking, tools and strategies for gauging and analyzing sustainable investment are offered. For instance, ET's Emissions Transparency Index highlights the importance of Scope 3 value chain emissions, which are publicly tracked for consumers and investors to track.

SocialBox.Biz also promotes this in their initiatives and causes. Earlier this month, SocialBox.Biz and leading FTSE Index Partners announced carbon emissions reduction through laptop handovers. Details on this partnership can be found at:

A Twitter post also made the announcement:

IT Managers, CIOs and CTOs can now help fight climate change

SocialBox.Biz offers the SocialBox, a donation point that can be placed by CIOs, CTOs, and IT managers to take in laptop and other business item donations. Items such as laptops can be wiped clean of data, loaded with open source software, and donated to homeless people to help them transition into careers and education.

Engaged Tracking's Emissions Transparency Index weights companies by their Scope 1, 2 and 3 emissions intensities and disclosure. Rehoming laptops can reduce greenhouse gas emissions in the Scope 3 category. This is one of the best ways for companies to do something positive for the environment while also doing something meaningful for their community.
