

Footballers tackle baldness and win, so why not you?

Saturday 21 September, 2013

It seems that whilst footballers and their coaches may enjoy the immense trappings of success that are part and parcel of the professional game these days, even the game's big players are not immune from one of life's biggest annoyances, namely male pattern baldness. A number of football's most influential players have been seeking treatment for hair loss in the last few years including England's forward Wayne Rooney, former England footballer Michael Gray, Watford's Italian manager Gianfranco Zola and most recently Germany Dortmund's coach Jurgen Klopp.

"It could have been a hairy situation, but it wasn't because of my team's high level of concentration," joked Klopp after his team, who faced Real Madrid in the Champions League semi-finals, won 6-1.

The 45-year-old coach admitted that he had a hair transplant before the start of the current season, which has sparked a debate in the German media about male grooming. "Yes, it's true. I underwent a hair transplant. I think the results are really cool, don't you?" said Klopp, who used to hide his balding head with a baseball cap.

It seems that all these football icons are only human and they are suffering in the same way as anyone else who is finding that their hair is thinning out faster than the grass on the typical end of season football pitch! On a serious note, hair loss can be a real blow for anyone. It can sap someone's confidence and, whether it happens at a younger age, such as in Mr Rooney's case, or at an older age, such as Mr Klopp's, it can be a devastating blow.

With two thirds of men in the UK suffering hair loss before they hit their forties, this is obviously a big issue that many men will have to address. FUE Hair Clinics© is helping men to not only face up to the issues of hair loss but also getting them to actively do something about it.

As the company name implies, FUE Hair Clinics© has pioneered a hair transplant technique called FUE (Follicular Unit Extraction). FUE is a non-invasive hair transplant method that involves the extraction and plantation of individual hair follicles. The follicles are extracted from the back or the sides of the head and are then inserted into the thinning or completely bald areas.

'The results of our FUE Hair Transplants are really genuine and impressive, giving our clients something that would otherwise be missing from their lives; a permanent, dense, natural looking head of hair that is in line with their age and features,' explained Michael Psaltakis, the Managing Director of FUE Hair Clinics©. 'To emphasise just how effective this exciting treatment is, all the FUE Hair Clinics© consultants have had the procedure! We believe in the treatment's effectiveness, which in itself is an advocate for the procedure. And as our motto says, Baldness is a Choice!'

With the new football season just kicked off, it should be interesting to see if any other players, managers or coaches have tackled and won baldness. But don't worry if you don't play the game professionally, thanks to FUE Hair Clinics©, you can still achieve a winning head of hair.
