Event marketing firm GB Business Enterprise often look for inspiration when leading their independent sales contractors to success. Recently GB Business Enterprise looked in-depth at the approach taken by Mark Ritson and his success story when driving sales. The manner in which Ritson achieved respect as a campaign manager, was to simply show the sales force how to increase their sales count and in turn their earning capacity. By empowering both the sales force and the marketing team, it allows coercion to occur in both departments. By allowing cross department communication to occur a full and more in-depth understanding of the market can be achieved. Once both parties appreciate their role in each other's success the respect is achieved and the ability to maximise marketing and sales strategies can be accomplished.

Respect on the efforts made by the marketing department is crucial for optimal results from the sales team. By demonstrating the importance of annual research, proper segmentation, choiceful targeting, differentiated positioning, smart objectives and zero-base budgeting, it will provide insight to the salesforce when planning strategies on time frames and territory assignment. By understanding when a target market is under influence of a targeted marketing strategy, it will in turn increase the likelihood of achieving a strong sales opportunity.
