Hair Transplant Turkey - Growing Industry Attracts New Visitors

Friday 26 February, 2016

When one talks about the destinations they would like to visit, the usual reasons include great sights to visit, good cuisine or interesting night life. Hair transplants would hardly ever cross your mind, but this is slowly becoming the latest craze in Turkey. This Middle East country is already well known tourist destination for various other reasons, but when it comes to attracting foreign capital to your country, there is no such a thing as too much. Any reason that attracts tourists to your country is usually a good one.

Following the Latest Trends:

While some may be surprised to hear that hair transplants in Turkey are such a lucrative and flourishing business, the explanation is not that strange at all. Some people in the country have simply picked up on the latest global trends and are looking to cash in on them.

A couple of decades ago, men were not nearly as concerned with their look as they are today. Having a full set of hair, while desirable, was not on many people's list of priorities. However, with the information becoming more accessible and fast development of the social media culture, more and more men are becoming self-aware and following in the footsteps of their famous role models from all walks of life.

It is thus no wonder that, according to some information out there, about 200 people undergoes a hair transplant procedure in Turkey every day, with the majority of patients being Arabs and people from European countries like Netherlands, England and Italy.

Hair Transplant Procedure in Turkey:

The operation, which usually takes about five hours, involves taking a few thousands grafts from a healthy part of the patient's scalp and then implanting them on the bold areas. Duration of the procedure depends primarily on the size of the transplant.

The procedure is fairly routine, but your scalp will feel tender for some days after the operation and you will need to take pain medications and sometimes anti-inflammatory drugs as well. After a few days, you should be able to go back to your normal everyday routine.

The transplanted hair will fall out after two or three weeks, but new hair should start appearing in the area after a couple of months. In some cases, growth enhancing medications will also be prescribed to improve the results.

Hair Transplants in Turkey:

If you made up your mind about going through with a hair transplant procedure, Turkey may be one of the best choices. The country really takes this new industry seriously, to the point where even government subsidies hair transplant clinics in different ways to help them succeed.

With this clearly serious approach by all parties involved, you can be certain that you will get the best experts and the best care your money can buy. Even though it is a fairly routine procedure, there are always risks connected to any operation, so your want to entrust yourself into the hands of real professionals.

When it comes to pricing, there is no one-fit-all model, as it will greatly depend on the age of a patient, the size of a graft and similar. As a general guideline, the cost can be anywhere from the $4,000 to $15,000 (or equivalent in your local currencies). For more information on hair transplant in Turkey, you can always get in touch with a clinic and ask more details about your specific situation.

Risks of Hair Transplant Procedure:

Like any operation, hair transplant procedure is not completely risk free. Possibilities of post operational bleeding or infection always exists. Apart from this, some people can also experience difficulties later on when new hair starts growing. Known complications include inflammation, unnaturally looking new hair and something called a "shock loss", which involves temporary loss of a newly transplanted hair.

When it comes to doing your hair transplant in Turkey, there are some other risks involved and things to be cautious about. While the new industry is growing, there are always those looking to take advantage of the situation and are not keeping up with the usual standards and procedure or making promises they cannot keep.
For anyone looking to have a hair transplant done it is thus of utmost importance to make sure they consult with a specialist doctor who can give a real advice based on actual situation and facts and not with someone who is just after making a quick money based on false promises.

Sometimes potential clients will be offered a certificate of guarantee. Although this may sound as a great offer, it should actually serve as an alarm bell. Giving out certificates of guarantee for medical procedures is illegal. Hair transplant is a full scale operation and giving out guarantees is not something any real medical professional would ever do.

Ask around. You will spend a substantial amount of money and willingly accept certain risks by undergoing this procedure, so before you make your final decision, make sure to ask around and compare everything, from prices to promises and previous results of different institutions and only make your choice when you are certain you are getting the most for your money. Do not be afraid to ask any questions that may be of interest, whether it is about the operation itself or about anything you may be concerned about after the fact. Once again, real professionals will understand your concerns and will be happy to put your mind at ease as much as possible.

Conclusion:

Whether you decide to do your hair transplant in Turkey or anywhere else, it is an important decision that will have impact on your overall satisfaction and confidence. The popularity of this industry is a clear indicator that there is a lot of interest for this procedure and when there is a demand, there is usually a decent number of trained people readily available to meet that demand.

However, there are always those who try to take advantage of any situation, so make sure to know who exactly you are dealing with before agreeing to anything and do not leave anything to chance. After all, you want the best possible results so make sure you will be getting the best possible treatment as well.
