

Here's what the Simpsons Living Room would look like in real life

Tuesday 12 July, 2022

The Simpsons' living room is one of the most recognisable in the world and it has now been tastefully recreated to show how it might look in real life.

In an experimental project, design studio Bobbi Beck has reimagined the room in the real world and has given it a fresh, contemporary update.

Explaining their approach to the concept redesign project, Creative Director James Mellan-Matulewicz said: "When we decided to bring to life the living room of 742 Evergreen Terrace, we knew that we had to pay respect to such an iconic room. However, this was tricky when it came to managing the bright colours in the home.

In reality, pink walls, green carpets, purple cabinets and a brown sofa don't look very nice together, so it was a real challenge keeping the living room tasteful, while still recognisably the Simpsons'."

Having been on our TVs for decades, the Simpsons, which debuted in 1989 is the longest-running American sitcom in history and has amassed 728 episodes to date.
