IKEA to test a new retail format to get closer to UK customers

It's IKEA, but not as you know it. Home furnishing retailer IKEA today announced plans to test a number of new retail formats in the UK. The planned Order and Collection Points aim to make shopping with IKEA easier and more convenient, connecting the experiences you can currently have with IKEA in-store and online, allowing customers to shop whenever, wherever and however they want.

The first Order and Collection Point will open in Norwich this Autumn.

Gillian Drakeford, IKEA UK Country Manager said, "We are extremely excited to announce our plans to test and explore Order and Collection Points as an addition to our current sales channels. We know that consumers in the UK like to shop across many channels and using multiple devices. Our customers are also telling us that with 18 stores in the UK, we are often too far away. Order and Collection Points give us the opportunity to trial new ways of being more accessible to our customers."

"We will start by testing this new format in Norwich. We already have an established online presence in this market but currently our customers in Norfolk have to travel more than two hours to our Lakeside or Milton Keynes stores to see the product range and get planning and design advice. By introducing an Order and Collection Point in this market we are hoping to bridge the gap between online and in-store shopping and offer customers a more personal service locally."

IKEA will explore slightly different Order and Collection Point formats in selected markets, using this as an opportunity to find out more about how customers want to shop with IKEA in these areas.

For Norwich specifically, the format will act primarily as a planning studio, where customers will be able to speak with home furnishing experts for advice and support when making more complex purchases, such as kitchens or wardrobes. Customers will have the opportunity to touch and test the product range and will be able to collect orders made online or in the store. The Norwich Order and Collection Point will also include a café and will have a limited range of products that customers can take home 'on the day'.

The new Order and Collection Points form part of plans to make IKEA more accessible. The ambitious expansion plans include rebuilding existing stores to improve the shopping experience, opening new stores in new locations, updating existing e-commerce platforms and adding additional services for customers.
