Is £4.28 Million Mega Fortune Dreams Jackpot Due to Drop?

Tuesday 27 June, 2017

The 777 Casino team have been keeping a close eye on the biggest international, progressive jackpots again. With Mega Moolah and Mega Fortune still in the early stages of a rise having fallen recently, and the likes of Hall of Gods steadfastly refusing to drop, we've turned out attention to the middle ground. That's where NetEnt's Mega Fortune Dreams comes into play. The jackpot has soared way beyond £4 million - and there's evidence to suggest it could drop soon.

Average Win Frequency on Jackpot Slots

When we say we keep a close eye on the biggest online casino jackpots, we look at very factors. Which jackpots are worth the most at the moment? Is there a jackpot that hasn't been won for a disproportionately long time? Is one slot generating lots of heat? These are all valid questions that we seek to address.

However, another factor worthy of consideration is average win frequency. This magical little figure tells us how many days - on average - elapse between one jackpot win and another. Now, it will never be entirely indicative of a set pattern, of course because jackpot games are controlled by Random Number Generators, just like other video slots. But, can they be accurate?

What Can Average Win Frequency Tell Us?

We've noticed that the biggest and most popular jackpot games have been quite slavish towards these average win frequencies of late. Before Mega Moolah fell twice in a couple of weeks, for example, it seemed to regularly drop once every couple of months - or pretty bang on it's average win frequency. Both Mega Fortune and Mega Fortune Dreams have similar average win frequencies, and they too have showed signs of following the pattern of late.

Other jackpot slots buck the trend somewhat. however. Hall of Gods used to fall quite regularly and still maintains an average win frequency of about 160 days, but it's latest win came after nearly 6 months of inactivity. Arabian Nights is even more weird at the moment. Despite being won every 112 days on average, nobody has hit the big prize for nearly a year. Now, given that then jackpot has 'only' risen to just over £1 million in that time, it's clearly less popular, which may explain the lack of winners in that time. But Hall of Gods did rise to over £5 million before it tumbled.

Which Jackpot Slot Should You Play?

You'd expect many players will flock to Arabian Nights because a win is overdue. Others give up on such stubborn games, and stick to the likes of Mega Moolah and the Mega Fortune games because they tumble more often. There's no right or wrong in each approach to jackpot gaming. But if you go for the latter option, then take heed of these patterns.

Mega Moolah last fell less than a month ago (against an average win frequency of once every 58 days) and it's only four weeks since someone won the Mega Fortune jackpot (against a 64 day average). On that basis, Mega Fortune Dreams is the way to go. Not only is it's £4.2 million jackpot figure considerably higher, it is also 82 days since it fell against a 62 day average.

£4.35 Million Jackpot to be Won on Mega Fortune Dreams

The Mega Fortune Dreams jackpot seems to rise quickly and steeply these days, hence why it currently tops £4.35 million just over 2.5 months after it last fell. Indeed, it's been rising faster than Mega Fortune itself according to recent trends. It's a hot jackpot slot, there's no doubt about that. Based on the law averages, it's the best jackpot slot to play at the moment.

Where to Play Mega Fortune Dreams?

It's true that Mega Fortune Dreams isn't as prevalent as some of the other jackpot slots, but it's still available at many of our favourite online casinos. Surprisingly, some of the sites which host pretty much
