

KIDS IN DRIVING SEAT WHEN IT COMES TO FAMILY HOLIDAYS

Wednesday 7 August, 2013

A major hotel chain has launched a package to put kids in the driving seat following research showing three quarters of parents now seek their approval before booking the family holiday.

To make sure it's a summer holiday to remember, Holiday Inn and Crowne Plaza's 12 London hotels have launched the VIK (Very Important Kids) package which, along with free stay and meals, includes a dedicated kid's room service line giving them mocktails, kid's snacks and films on demand.

Launched at the start of the hottest summer for a decade, the package also celebrates the rise of the staycation, with the hotels already reporting a 58% rise in bookings compared to the same periods in 2011 and 2012.

Jon Beecroft, General Manager at Holiday Inn London Kensington Forum, said: "Children no longer take a back seat when it comes to decision making and with parents feeling the pressure to juggle a busy work and family life, I'm sure the extra help with decision making is extremely welcomed.

"We think it's great that kids are making sure their summer holiday is fun and wanted to celebrate by putting them in the driving seat – literally. British families are embracing the capital more than ever this year, and with so many attractions to keep them entertained, it comes as no surprise."
