

LGB Direct: Learning the art of Delegation

Wednesday 1 October, 2014

Business management is a fundamental part of the working day for business owners. However, to ensure business growth and success, entrepreneurs must learn the art of delegation, claims LGB Direct.

Delegation is important in business for a number of reasons, LGB Direct highlights how delegation can be good for business owners because it teaches them to trust their team with tasks and understand that they are not the only one in the business capable of getting things done. Delegation is also good for the team; it helps them upgrade both their skills and their confidence, as well as giving them the opportunity to showcase their competence.

LGB Direct has come up with the five elements of delegation that business owners should understand in order to be a productive and efficient leader:

Determine what to delegate

This should be as much as possible but not just the tasks that are the most boring or difficult. Team selection is perhaps the key to deciding which jobs are delegated. As seen in football, the manager's primary role is to enrol the team and select the players, but stay off the pitch.

Identify the right person

Sticking to the football analogy, the manager also determines the positions of the players based on the particular skills of the individuals. Other factors should include those that can devote the time, are interested in the assignment, understand the background, can handle the job, are reliable, and are keen to grow.

Assign the task

Unusually, less is more when it comes to instruction, even on major projects. The person delegated to will, most likely, be keen to demonstrate their abilities. Too much instruction kills their creativity and motivation. Instead, try to agree on a 'vision' for the end result and leave the route for achieving that vision up to them.

Monitor Progress

Delegating does not mean abandoning. Monitor the person's progress, perhaps at scheduled times, and offer constructive feedback. If coaching is required this is the stage that it will be revealed. Again it should be the minimum to re-establish the vision and ensure they have the right skills/tools to complete the task.

Evaluate performance

Don't forget to comment on the end product. Praise is a great motivator, so seek to give it out generously when evaluating the tasks of others. Even if the job was done poorly, start and end feedback with a positive.
