

Magic Hour opens a searchable hub of more than 200 free AI tools for UK creators

Monday 7 September, 2026

Magic Hour AI, Inc., the AI video and image creation platform, has opened a searchable hub containing more than 200 AI tools spanning image, video and audio creation.

The update is intended for creators, educators, small businesses and digital teams in the UK and internationally. The hub groups practical tools by medium and task, with many no-sign-up entry points and direct routes into fuller creation workflows where available.

What the update offers

- A searchable catalogue spanning video, image and audio
- Many free, no-sign-up entry points
- Focused pages built around a specific input and output
- Routes into related creation and editing workflows

Why it matters for UK creative teams

A large catalogue creates value only when people can quickly understand what each tool does. Clear task-based pages help visitors move from a specific need to an appropriate workflow without learning an entire platform first.

Practical uses

- A small business can test a focused creative task before adopting a wider workflow
- An educator can identify tools for visual, audio or video assignments
- A creator can move from a free utility into related production tools

"Making AI tools useful starts with helping people find the right workflow for the job. The hub gives creators a clearer route from an idea to a tool they can evaluate immediately," said Runbo Li, co-founder of Magic Hour.

A common question

Are all Magic Hour tools available without signing up?

The catalogue contains many no-sign-up tools. Some advanced workflows, longer outputs or account-based features use the full creation experience, and each product page explains its current access path.

Features, models, limits and pricing can change. Generative results vary with source quality, prompts and settings. Organisations should review outputs for visual accuracy, rights, disclosure requirements and suitability before public or commercial use.
