Competition for customer attention is at an all time high. This is a huge challenge for brands that rely on traditional forms of advertising such as TV advertising. TV advertising is struggling and 2015 will be the first year in which streamed on-demand video overtakes scheduled broadcast TV viewing on a weekly basis; this means people can choose TV on-demand services where there are no ads, and even if they don't, they will have even more ability to skip ads (source: marketingmagazine.co.uk 27 May 2015).

The impact of this? Brands need to properly engage a customer within the first three seconds, otherwise they are gone. Marketers today must ensure that they are fully prepared to present the customers with their brand's products and services, say something that will make them stand out from the norm, or promise the customer something that will keep them interested. When initially interacting with customers, the first impact must be as striking as it possibly can be states Citipeak Events.
