

Man runs 52 Marathons in 52 Weeks in aid of International Children's Charity

Thursday 1 February, 2018

Chris Patterson of Daventry, Northamptonshire, is to compete in 52 marathons in 52 weeks in 2018. His '52 in 52' campaign is aiming to raise at least £12,000 in aid of international children's charity Hope for Children.

Chris, a long-time supporter of the charity, has already completed the London Marathon (2017) and ultra-marathon, Marathon des Sables (2016) – commonly referred to as the 'Toughest Footrace on Earth' – in recent years, but this challenge will push his physical and mental strength to new extremes.

Throughout 2018, he will be taking part in events all over the world including marathons in Edinburgh, Barcelona and China. So far, Chris has already completed the Endurance Life Marathon in Anglesey, the Gran Canaria Marathon and the Holly Challenge in Telford.

Whilst most races will take place over long weekends, next week Chris will be attempting 5 marathons in 5 days all over Kent between 10th to 14th February, ending with the Valentines Day Marathon. When he has completed his challenge, Chris will have run over 1,362 miles, roughly the distance between Hemel Hempstead (where the charity is based) and the coast of Africa, the continent where many of the charity's projects have an impact.

Chris Patterson said: "I first became aware of Hope for Children when I ran the Marathon des Sables (MdS) for them in 2016. One of the first things that attracted me to Hope was the fact they were one of the smaller charities and I felt money raised would make a real difference. Having completed the MdS I had a "gap year" and felt I needed a new challenge for 2018....and came up with 52 in 52. People kept telling me I've lost the plot and now I've done the first three, I realise they were right. No matter how difficult it gets, its important I remember the work that Hope are doing and how we are helping to improve the lives of others. It's been great to get involved with Hope's "Head Held High appeal" and I regularly read the updates/stories on the Hope website for motivation! Any extra support you can give me and Hope is very welcome."

Murielle Maupoint, CEO of Hope for Children, said: "When Chris first came to us with this idea last year, we weren't sure if this was even possible. But once, he took us through his training and race plans, and most importantly showed his desire and passion to raise funds for our life-changing work, we got fully behind him. To complete 1 marathon is huge achievement; to complete 52 is extraordinary. Chris is a true Hope Hero."

Funds raised by Chris will support the charity's work all over the world to enable vulnerable children, particularly orphans and children living in extreme poverty, to experience a happy, healthy and positive childhood. Their projects improve children's access to education and healthcare, and empower their families to support themselves whilst developing their confidence and self-esteem.
