Headed by SEO specialist Joe, lead storyteller, and former newspaper travel editor Sarah Gordon, this winning combination has seen Contese, the agency working internationally with brands who want to enhance their online presence. Their powerful words and vibrant imagery keep the audience coming back for more.

Contese agency travel content writers strike a fine balance between selling a destination and the travel company's services, immersing the potential customer in a world of rich cultures and adventure while also telling them how, when, and with whom to experience these dazzling destinations.

Why content writing for travel converts

With all the new demands from holiday seekers, the growth of Airbnb, and the doubt some travellers still feel post-Covid when confirming a booking, having excellent travel writers on their side helps brands stand out from the competition. Whether providing optimised website content for a rebranded hotel, inspirational articles for in-flight magazines, blog posts to boost traffic or social media posts to enhance connection, Contese has a team of experts that can tackle all types of travel writing.

Writing about travel means transporting the reader to a new world, tempting them with the inspiring sights, tantalising smells and curious sounds they'll find there. It's about fascinating new destinations, memorable evenings, and assuring the audience, they can fully relax far from home, with no doubts left on the table. Successful travel writers create a film script that the audience will direct, and answer all their questions simultaneously.

Because even in the age of Instagram, words still have power. However, many beautiful photos are posted, no matter the elegance of the facilities or the decadence of the cuisine, travel companies can't get far if they aren't reaching their target audience.

This means the audience must be able to find the company, and then the answers and inspiration that will convince them to make a booking. Key facts should be provided, along with the confidence needed to convert that interest into a booking. While the photos provide inspiration and wanderlust, the words convert.

Storyteller Sarah Gordon explains that this delicate balance between painting a picture and selling a holiday is complex. In her 15 years as a travel editor for major brands such as MailOnline and The Telegraph, she knows how to strike the right balance.

Over 90 per cent of travel websites don't receive traffic from Google

For companies with a weak online presence, travel content creation becomes yet more important. Having a limited online presence means weaker lead generation, lower conversion rates, and a smaller ROI. By optimising a travel website with SEO-driven content, a company can quickly increase its visibility and find a new audience of global travellers.

SEO specialist Joe says: 'In today's online environment, content marketing is a necessity if you want to succeed in the travel sector.' However, it's not as simple as sprinkling keywords throughout a landing page or blog post.

A good travel writer begins with in-depth research about the target audience, weaves it into powerful quality SEO-optimised writing, and keep readers engaged with in-depth answers and advice.
