MJ Experia Marketing share how they often encourage their self-employed contractors to have a change in environment and reveal this is the reason they regularly host road trips, in order to demonstrate this productivity increase. The firm state how their results are often increased when they take part in these road trips and believe that this is due to a change in environment inspiring their contractors to perform better.

MJ Experia Marketing are confident that to be a success in business it is important to never be stagnant or content and that every individual should always be aiming to increase their productivity, strengthen their results and look for new methods in order to inspire and motivate individuals. MJ Experia Marketing highlights how businesses who always stay the same and never try anything new will be overtaken by businesses who are willing to explore new environments and embrace change.

Matt Wassall of MJ Experia Marketing encourages everyone to regularly change their environment in order to encourage productivity. The CEO states that the change does not need to be as drastic as moving house but could mean something as simple as going for a walk in order to enjoy a change of scenery and to encourage creativity.
