

More choice in British fiction for readers in the United States

Monday 5 October, 2020

British publisher

Sparkling Books has now made all its titles available to readers in America. The list includes mystery and detective works, romance, women's fiction and adventure stories for ages 9 upwards. Printed books can be ordered online from Barnes and Noble, Books-a-million and Bookshop.org and other stores. Full details of these novel gifts, reviews and free previews to read are available to read at www.sparklingbooks.com

To mark the completion of availability in America, Sparkling Books have republished a romance, The Eloquence of Desire by Amanda Singleton-Williams, for the North American market.

The list includes The Sicilian Woman's Daughter by Linda Lo Scuro which has 36 reviews, many from the US. The book tells the story of a British-born girl pushing back against dark forces from her Italian family history. Another title is the Gothic horror, Lynnwood, by Thomas Brown, which was a finalist in a UK prize competition.

Continuing a series from the late Jim French's Imagination Theater, detective story enthusiasts can enjoy When Anthony Rathe Investigates by Matthew Booth.

Those who love to read British mysteries can indulge in an omnibus edition, Three British Mystery Novels, featuring Lynnwood and two other titles, Ellipsis by Nikki Dudley and A Taste for Blood by the Sherlock Holmes author David Stuart Davies, all in one volume.

For younger readers, the list includes an adventure story for girls, Petronella and the Janjilons by Cheryl Bentley, and an adventure story to get boys reading, Peregrine Harker & The Black Death by Luke Hollands.

These titles and more are also available as e-books from all major e-book stores.
