In Syria, a four-year civil war has claimed an estimated 160,000 lives, with no end in sight. Egypt has reverted to de facto military rule, with Islamists vowing revenge against what they view as the unjust ousting of the Muslim Brotherhood. Iraq – already driven by religious and ethnic hatred – is in the grip of an invasion by ISIS extremists who make even al-Qaeda pale in comparison in their capacity for brutality. In Afghanistan, democratic elections are being overshadowed by the threat of a resurgent Taliban with a possibility of a conflict spilling over to Pakistan. We are discussing the dangers of these countries becoming failed states. Whatever the agenda is behind, violence is costing the world community $9.8 trillion, $1,350 per person.

In a period of this momentous change all of the distinguished panel speakers will examine how beating of the war drums can be stopped thus opening new possibilities of resolution of conflicts for a safer and more peaceful world.
