

New social enterprise unlocks £7bn in unused loyalty rewards for charity

Wednesday 28 February, 2018

- 94% of UK consumers have loyalty cards but only 49% always redeem their points
- Younger people less likely to redeem, with only 43% of 18-24 year olds claiming to always redeem, but 56% of 55+ year olds
- The result is £7bn in unused points, miles and cashback in the UK each year, sitting around doing nothing
- 53% of loyalty card users have lost their rewards because they didn't use them
- 52% felt annoyed and 17% felt outraged as a result
- 66% would give their unused rewards to charity

New social enterprise, For Good Causes, launches today (28.2.2018) enabling people to convert their unused loyalty rewards into cash for their favourite charities. For Good Causes aims to work with as many of the UK's 200+ loyalty programmes as possible starting with Quidco, the UK's largest cashback service. For Good Causes seeks to raise £100m in the next five years through developing new ways for people to give to the charities that they love.

Quidco's 7 million members now have the option to donate their earned cashback to a charity of their choice through For Good Causes. Since starting in 2005, Quidco members have earned over £400 million in cashback, with the average Quidco member earning £305 a year.

Media:

Related Sectors:

Business & Finance :: Charities & non-profits :: Lifestyle & Relationships :: Personal Finance :: Retail & Fashion :: Women & Beauty ::

Related Keywords:

Loyalty :: Rewards :: Points :: Charity :: Donations :: Gift Cards ::

Scan Me:

