Tuesday 24 November, 2015

Leakserv is a new service dedicated to helping victims of revenge porn. The revenge porn removal service uses skilled professionals and hi-tech gadgets to help victims find and remove such content from the web.

November 24, 2015 (Netherlands): Leakserv is a revenge porn removal service. It was started by a group of people who started receiving a lot of emails and requests from women to help them get rid of revenge porn on the internet. The idea behind the service is to help reduce trauma for the victims by getting such explicit content off the web.

Revenge porn refers to the posting of sexually explicit content on the internet without permission from the person or people featuring in the said content. The content could be photos or videos, sometimes accompanied by the victim's name, contact details, social media profile or other such personal details. There could also be written text accompanying the content that demeans or humiliates the victim. The content could be posted on porn websites, social media networks or uploaded just about anywhere on the internet.

The highly skilled professionals at Leakserv are sensitive to the trauma and distress experienced by the victims of revenge porn. The professionals use their knowledge and skills to help alleviate the trauma of the victims by taking off such compromising and explicit content from the internet. Anyone in such distress can email Leakserv with details of the content. The team will get to work immediately and get such content off the internet as quickly as possible.

Time is the most important factor when it comes to revenge porn. Every minute that such content is up on the internet helps it spread across various networks, be downloaded and shared multiple times. So victims are urged not to panic or be scared and to contact Leakserv as soon as they find such content online. The earlier the team gets a request to find and remove such content, the easier it is to limit it from spreading across the internet.
