

Period Windows Defined With Modern Materials

Monday 21 May, 2018

No longer are homeowners, architects and planners faced with replacing tired old wooden casement windows with newer variants in the same materials, thanks to the period-inspired Residence 9 system from The Residence Collection.

Residence 9 was developed as the first ever PVCu flush sash window based on 19th Century timber sightlines in 2011 and it remains the most authentic timber alternative window in the UK. It's been widely accepted by discerning homeowners, architects and planners, boasting a number of installations in conservation areas and Grade II listed buildings.

So what's so special about Residence 9? The company's strapline of 'Windows The Way They're Meant To Be' gives more than a hint of what's been the inspiration for the product innovation. A traditionally elegant flush exterior and stylish deep decorative interior gives the window its classic aesthetic, along with perfect symmetry, thanks to equal glass sightlines.

Carefully chosen colours inspired by The Cotswolds, along with rich and life like woodgrains form part of the product philosophy, along with a deep nose cill specifically designed by Residence 9. This window can also be manufactured using traditional mechanical joints, butt hinges and features a range of period hardware in nine finishes, including monkey and pear drop handles, pegs and stays, all branded with the recognisable 'R'.

If you want further inspiration then visit www.residencecollection.co.uk to download a premium brochure and a guide to planning and conservation. You can also use their unique Window Visualiser and quickly create your very own Residence 9 windows on a range of period properties and they're also highly influential on social media through Facebook, LinkedIn, Instagram, Pinterest and Houzz.
