

PETA Steps In To Help British Nude Held Prisoner and Stop 10 Innocent Buffalo from Grisly Decapitation

Thursday 11 June, 2015

Following reports that British student Eleanor Hawkins, who was arrested in Malaysia after stripping at the peak of Mount Kinabalu, faces an ultimatum (give locals 10 buffalo heads or spend three months in prison), PETA has fired off a letter offering assistance. In the letter, PETA founder Ingrid E Newkirk urges the British student to resist and not to sentence 10 vulnerable animals to pay with their lives for something that had nothing to do with them.

"I grew up in India and have personally rescued buffalo from slaughter and know them to be truly wonderful individuals with a hard life," writes Newkirk. "I have also been to prison for animal protection, for instance, for interrupting a bird shoot, and have been jailed in Asia for protesting the slaughter of bulls and festival bullfights. In fact, spending time in jail might give you the experience and insight you need to write an article or book. In addition, I don't think anything awful will happen to you there, and you may even make new lifelong friends and learn much that you'll value when you rejoin society."

PETA goes on to propose that Hawkins make a peace offering to appease the guardian of the mountain in the form of a donation to a bona fide orang-utan sanctuary in Borneo – and promises to provide her with the funds to do so.

PETA's letter to Hawkins is available in full below.

Dear Eleanor,

I am writing to you on behalf of PETA, and on tens of thousands of British and Malaysian supporters. I'm sorry for the situation you're in and hope you're hanging in in this stressful time. Will you please send a message of good will to all by taking us up on our offer below?

We understand that Peta Tardema Anne Saron Sufrenan has proposed that you give the five hundred to eight hundred dollars, which could be in the form of killing 10 buffalo. We suggest you to turn down this proposal and not to sentence 10 vulnerable animals to pay with their lives for something that had nothing to do with them. We will help you.

I grew up in India and have personally rescued buffalo from slaughter, and know them to be truly wonderful individuals with a hard life. I have also been to prison for animal protection, for instance, for interrupting a bird shoot, and have been jailed in Asia for protesting the slaughter of bulls and festival bullfights. In fact, spending time in jail might give you the experience and insight you need to write an article or book. In addition, I don't think anything awful will happen to you there, and you may even make new lifelong friends and learn much that you'll value when you rejoin society.

Please ask if you can make a peace offering to appease the guardian of the mountain in the form of a donation to a bona fide orang-utan sanctuary in Borneo. We will provide you with the funds equal to the market value of the buffalo. This gesture would not only help animals but also support Malaysia's important tourism industry.

Keep your spirits up and stay strong, and please extend your compassion to all.

Kind regards,

Ingrid E. Newkirk
Founder
