About Precision Acquisitions: <http://www.precisionacquisitionsdirect.com/about-us/>

Entrepreneurship requires confidence; this will allow individuals to conjure belief and trust in employees, co-workers and investors alike. Anyone struggling with self-belief will ultimately restrict their ability to succeed, says Precision Acquisitions Direct. Taking risks is fundamental in the journey of a business person, and for anyone looking to influence others delivery with confidence will determine how these messages are received. The firm believes improving communication skills is the first step to boosting confidence. As the company are often mentoring up and coming talent they offer their top 6 tips on how to improve confidence in others:

1. Attention – By providing someone your full attention it places emphasis on your personal value of their input. By agreeing with aspects of the information will boost their inner personal value and be more likely to have an input moving forward.
2. Acceptance – unconditional acceptance boosts an individual's self-esteem. Take opportunities to offer acceptance of ideas, good or bad to encourage innovation and creativity in others.
3. Smile – A genuine smile goes a long way with people, and by engaging only 13 muscles there's no excuse. Smiling to others communicates your positive purpose and removes any feelings of threat for the other party.
4. Appreciation – Leaders should always practice praise or recommendation for positive actions, this boosts confidence and value within an organisation, and an often increases productivity and attitude.
5. Approval – Expressing support will increase an external impression of yourself, it will also improve morale in others.
6. Compliments – By offering genuine compliments, it allows people to boost their overall positivity. People like to feel good about themselves, so provide compliments often when appropriate.
