

Proof As If Proof Were Needed: Blast Theory premieres latest interactive artwork at SXSW 2025 made in collaboration with Taiwanese artist Ting-Tong Chang

Thursday 23 January, 2025

Pioneers of interactive art Blast Theory will premiere their latest work, Proof As If Proof Were Needed, made in collaboration with Ting-Tong Chang, at SXSW 2025.

Proof As If Proof Were Needed is an interactive single screen video installation which invites visitors to move around the floorplan of a Taiwanese house. As you step into a room, the video projection switches to show that room.

As you explore the house, you discover the history of a couple who lived there. They have returned to their deserted home to tidy up the secrets they hold from each other.

The work is both a closed loop and a story that unfolds progressively. The order in which you explore the rooms opens up different interpretations.

Proof As If Proof Were Needed is a vivid cinematic work that follows the logic of dreams as you wander through the debris of a relationship breakdown.

The work will premiere as part of the XR Experience Competition at SXSW in Austin, Texas later this year.

Proof As If Proof Were Needed is a collaboration by Ting-Tong Chang and Blast Theory.

Proof As If Proof Were Needed is part of the Future Art and Culture programme at SXSW produced by British Underground and Arts Council England with partnership support from the British Council. With additional support via British Council, BFI Travel Grants and the Taiwanese National Culture and Art Foundation's (NCAF) Rainbow Initiative.
