

PublicRecordSearch.co.uk Just Launched a New Public Record Website

Tuesday 2 March, 2021

PublicRecordSearch.co.uk just released it's new and improved UK Public Record Search website. This site offers deep insights into looking up public records in the UK with tailored content that is broken down by region. This online resource also offers a multitude of public record related articles and an interactive blog where people can read what public information others are interested in, or ask a question for direction. Since the release of the Freedom of Information Act of 2005, the UK now offers access to more public records than ever however, these can be notoriously difficult to find. Many people do not know what constitutes a public record and what is publicly available. PublicRecordSearch.co.uk created this robust online resource to make that process simple and accessible. Public Record Search created a simple to use index that allows people to research looking up public records, from birth and death records to criminal and court records. There are also multitude of government resources that Public Record Search highlights so that anyone in the UK can make a formal request for information from the various UK government bodies. "Public Record Search has broken down how to lookup UK public records by country, region and county with a couple of clicks," as stated by a PRS representative. He continues to say, "Anyone with a smartphone, laptop or computer can use Public Record Search to assist in finding information about themselves and their family history."
