

Qashivo Launches AI Platform to Help UK SMEs Get Paid Faster

New fintech solution helps businesses improve cashflow visibility while reducing time spent chasing unpaid invoices

LONDON, UK – Qashivo, a UK fintech startup, has launched an AI-powered credit control platform designed to help SMEs improve cashflow visibility, reduce manual invoice chasing and gain greater confidence in when payments will arrive.

While many businesses focus on winning new customers, late payments remain one of the biggest pressures on SME cashflow. Qashivo addresses this challenge by analysing customer payment responses, identifying intent and helping businesses take the most effective next action.

Unlike traditional reminder software, Qashivo interprets customer conversations to understand whether a payment has been promised, disputed or delayed. The result is a clearer view of expected cashflow and less time spent manually managing overdue invoices.

"Businesses should not have to guess when money will arrive," said Simon Kramer, Founder and CEO of Qashivo. "The information already exists within customer conversations. Qashivo helps businesses turn those conversations into actionable cashflow intelligence, giving business owners and accountants greater visibility and control."

Industry leaders have already recognised the commercial potential of the platform.

"It's not often I come across such an exciting new product or service," said Simon Carter, Chief Commercial Officer of Spark Finance.

Simon Wahab, CEO of Simon & Co, added: "I run a successful accountancy practice and could immediately see the value of Qashivo. It solves a genuine problem for SMEs, and I can see the value in it."

The platform has been designed specifically for SMEs and accounting firms, enabling bookkeepers and accountants to deliver scalable 'Credit Control as a Service' across multiple clients while helping business owners recover cash faster and reduce administrative burden.

Qashivo has received HMRC Advance Assurance and is currently raising SEIS investment to support product launch, partner onboarding and early market expansion.
