

Record Levels Of Interest For New Homes In Bristol

Wednesday 26 March, 2014

A combination of increased confidence in the property market, the availability of Help to Buy and pent up demand for new homes have generated unprecedented interest in new homes in Bristol – even before they are launched.

Barratt is set to launch four new developments in the city in the coming months and sales director Andrea Pilgrim said the level of interest has been tremendous and reinforces the five star builder's commitment to creating new homes in the area.

"Our developments in the Bristol area have always sold well and we always believed our new developments would be popular but even we have been surprised by the number of people pre-registering for the new developments," she said.

"Latest housing market reports have been extremely optimistic and that together with Help to Buy is giving people the confidence to come in and make 2014 the year to move."

The new developments will create more than 350 new homes in the area with the first development to launch scheduled to be Colliers Court in Speedwell where Barratt will be creating 77 new homes just three miles from the city centre.

A range of two, three and four bedroom homes will be built at Colliers Court which has been designed to reflect the historic area of Speedwell and provide a mix of homes with a central green for residents.
