

reSound opens the doors to individual sellers, offering a low-cost, trusted marketplace to sell musical instruments.

Wednesday 25 September, 2024

London, UK – 24 September 2024 – reSound, the British marketplace for refurbished and pre-loved musical instruments and audio equipment, is thrilled to announce that individual sellers can now list and sell their gear on the platform.

Unlike other marketplaces like Reverb and eBay, which charge upwards of 8% in seller and payment processing fees, reSound offers a fair solution, charging only a 2% payment processing fee—without hidden or upfront costs. This makes selling on reSound not only more affordable but also more profitable for individuals looking to sell their instruments and gear.

Evan Michaels, CEO of reSound, states, ‘This is a significant step forward in helping musicians access the gear they need. When musicians sell their instruments, they shouldn’t have to lose a large portion of their earnings to excessive fees. This is a game-changing idea, and it’s refreshing to support musicians rather than take their money away.’

Sellers are backed by a robust Seller Protection Programme, which ensures secure transactions and smooth operations. Comprehensive checks are in place to maintain the platform’s integrity, giving both buyers and sellers peace of mind. This reflects reSound’s mission to create a sustainable and supportive marketplace for the musicians community and make the world a more musical place.

Lee Alexander, CRO of reSound, adds, ‘We’ve always been about supporting the musician community. Now, we’re providing a platform that’s truly on their side—whether they’re upgrading their gear or just need to sell without the hassle or high fees. We’re committed to making that process easy, secure, and fair.’
