Roar Ambition: Entrepreneurship is for the Many, Not the Few

Wednesday 19 July, 2017

With new reports suggesting more children than ever before are dreaming of starting their businesses in the future, Roar Ambition has discussed why now is the time to promote entrepreneurship as an inclusive community and shared what they are doing to help aspiring entrepreneurs find their feet.

Keen supporters of entrepreneurship Roar Ambition are pleased to learn new research by Barclays Business Banking has identified that two-fifths, 42 percent of school children want to launch their own business. Barclays is keen for schools and colleges to offer the young entrepreneurs the support to nurture their dreams of becoming a business owner.

Flashing forward to 2025 the UK has an opportunity to bring an additional 100,000 new firms and a whopping £23.3 billion injected into the economy. Keen to avoid a similar figure from 2016 where business owners aged 25 and under accounted for a mere 6 percent of start-up owners. Roar Ambition feels it is the responsibility of local businesses also to offer opportunities for the younger generation to learn about skills that will enhance their chances of success in business ownership.

Roar Ambition is keen to highlight to the younger generation that business ownership and start up isn't reserved for the wealthy, that there are support and openings that will require little or no financial investment if they just knew where to look. With many self-made entrepreneurs to take inspiration from it is plain to see that a balance of willingness to learn and a strong work ethic is all that is needed to start out.
