

Royal London's Sterling Extra Yield Bond Fund Breaks £1 Billion Mark

Tuesday 10 June, 2014

Royal London's Sterling Extra Yield Bond Fund, managed by Eric Holt, has broken the £1 billion mark. Launched in 2003 the fund's objective is to achieve a high level of income.

Eric Holt puts the fund's success down to his unique investment process. Mr Holt said:

"I am grateful for the support given to my fund. It invests across a range of investment grade, sub grade and unrated bonds. A combination of attractive yield, diversification and the flexibility to take certain opportunities have all contributed to its success. In addition, the risk posed by sub-investment grade bonds is mitigated by investing in secured bonds which come with a favourable claim on the underlying assets. It has also benefited from the ability to invest in some interesting and niche companies."

The Fund's credentials were recognised last week when it won the Money Observer award for "Best Larger Fund - UK Bonds" and it has been shortlisted in the upcoming Investment Week Fund Manager of the Year Awards for best fund in the Strategic Bond sector.

The Fund joins colleague Martin Cholwill's UK Equity Income Fund which broke the £1 billion mark in February 2014.

Notes to Editors:

Funds under management = £1.002 billion as at 9th June 2014.

About Royal London:
