

TELF AG Announces the Release of Article on Stainless Steel Market Prices

Saturday 26 August, 2023

Lugano, Switzerland – August 26, 2023 – TELF AG, a renowned international physical commodities trader with a legacy of three decades in the industry, published an article shedding light on the recent shifts in the stainless steel market.

The article, titled "Stainless Steel Prices Show Signs of Recovery Amidst Changing Market Dynamics," talks about the turnaround observed in the stainless steel market after a period of prolonged price decline. The article analyzes the factors behind the resurgence in prices, including the role of European Mills' offers and a surge in speculative buying.

The main highlight of the article is the resurgence of prices for fresh production from mills, which has reversed the downtrend that persisted since February. This turnaround is particularly noteworthy as it follows a substantial ~€1,200 /t drop for CR 304 stainless steel from February to June. The article attributes this price rebound to several factors, including the increased activity of European Mills and a surge in speculative buying.

Insights from stainless steel distributors provide a valuable perspective on the market's dynamics. The article reports that while some distributors experienced a decline in orders during July, reflecting a seasonal trend as Europe entered the holiday season, mills' order books saw strengthening month-on-month. This strengthening is attributed to an increase in purchases from distributors, signaling a growing confidence in the market's recovery.
